Two months before the presidential election George Papadopoulos got a strange request out of the blue for a meeting with Stefan K. Halper, a Cambridge professor. Now, it might not have seemed fishy at the time Papadopoulos agreed to the meeting, but after looking at the timeline, it's a game changer. Halper has close ties to both the CIA and Britain's M-15. Halper also met with two other Trump staffers. During the meeting with Papadopoulos, Halper asked him, "George, you know about hacking the emails from Russia, right?" Papadopoulos said that he knew nothing about it.

Halper later contacted Papadopoulos and asked him to write a paper on issues related to Turkey, Cyprus, Israel and the Leviathan natural gas field. Papadopoulos would be paid $3,000 and would get his airfare and hotels paid for a three day visit to London. Papadopoulos wrote the paper and turned it in and was paid just two days later. There is no record that the paper was ever published. That seems very suspicious. Papadopoulos then met a Professor Joseph Mifsud, who told him that Russians had hacked into the DNC email and had a huge number of emails.

So, now Papadopoulos heard about the emails twice from two separate people.

Then Australian High Commissioner to the United Kingdom Alexander Downer asked to meet with Papadopoulos which begs the question, why did he want to meet him? After all, Papadopoulos was a minor player in the Trump campaign. It has been claimed that Papadopoulos was drunk during that meeting but what if he were drugged? He allegedly told Downer that the Russians had DNC emails, but he learned that from Halper and Mifsud. After Wikileaks started posting the emails, Downer went to the FBI and reported his conversation with Papadopoulos.

Here is where I become really suspicious. How did they know the emails had been hacked? Certainly, no Russian would admit to it and no one in America knew about them allegedly. I think they did know about the stolen emails and that they knew Seth Rich stole them and they were creating a cover story that the Russians did it. That may not be right, but it's what I believe. It was within this timeframe that Rich was murdered.

From The Daily Caller

What remains unclear is why Downer sought the meeting with Papadopoulos. Was it to become acquainted with a member of Trump's foreign policy advisory team, or was it an opportunity to gather intelligence?

The latter scenario — of a spy operation — is what Papadopoulos wonders was at play when Halper contacted him before the election. There are no clear connections between Halper and Downer, though the pair did speak on the same panel at a 2010 Cambridge seminar.

Papadopoulos and Halper met several times during the London trip, including at the Connaught Hotel and the Travellers Club — a classic 19th century club foreign diplomats and politicians frequent. Halper's research assistant — a Turkish woman named Azra Turk — also met with Papadopoulos. The Connaught Hotel meeting was scheduled for Sept. 13, 2016, and the Travellers Club conclave was two days later.

Carter Page also visited London at Halper's request. So did one other senior campaign official, who has not been named. I am always suspicious when things work out perfectly. We all know that life doesn't work that way.
